Your Winter Update from True Vision

Ohio's Winter Beauty

First and foremost, I hope everyone is enjoying the start to the new year, and yes, the Ohio winter weather as well. The snow we've gotten so far has been the pretty kind, as opposed to the messy kind, for the most part. We've even had a few days of sunshine here and there, which should make us all feel good since they're such a rarity.

We always enjoy watching the wild birds at our feeders. They especially love the black oil sunflower seed! We haven't seen the hawk's nest occupied yet, but I'm not sure if they reuse them.

All is well in the chicken coop for the most part. Ohio driver's aren't the only ones living in fear of the "white death" because the chickens won't set foot on it. Unfortunately, we did lose one of our hens but we're not sure exactly what happened.

No signs of fowl play, so that's good news. Oddly, the flock seems happier and more peaceful, laying more eggs and going through less food without

Days to Celebrate
Quarterly Birthdays

We have two days to celebrate this quarter as both Rich, our optician, and Michael, Dr. Hopkins' husband, have January birthdays. Let's wish them both another year of good health and prosperity!

her. She must've been a piggy little freeloader...haha!

During my morning walks, I can see the footprints of many animals if the snow is light. The deer prints are always a given. The other day I saw 8 of them running and playing together. Besides rabbits and squirrels, there are various canine type prints also. There's probably a fox around because he got one of the neighbors' hens in the spring. The larger ones may belong to a coyote so we're keeping our eyes open. There's plenty of activity to see with the trees being bare, but we're already looking forward to the beauty of a new spring season.

Our horses are already starting to lose some hair as the days are getting longer now. I'm happy to say that Jack continues to recover well from his surgery in the fall. His feeding schedule has been pretty labor intensive, but we finally have his weight back up to a healthy level. He's such a sweet old guy that we're glad to stay close and feed him 2-3 times a day to keep him happy and healthy!

Thank You from all of us!

We are so glad to have you all as patients and customers. If you feel the same about us, please do refer friends and family to come see us. Our schedule is flexible and we would love to build new relationships by taking care of the people who are most important to you.

Thank you for choosing us!

Thank Goodness for 2021

The hope of a new year, and even looking forward to signs of spring, is just what we needed to clarify a necessary change in our perspective. 2020 saw us all focused on how the many changes we faced affected our families and ourselves. My hope for 2021 is that we can all focus on how the changes to come will affect us all, together.

Together is the way we will help each other. Together is the way we will eventually work and shop and go to the movies. Together is the way we will finally share a meal. Together is the way we will get through whatever 2021 brings.

Together is the way.
