COACH

Coach, Inc. is a designer, producer, and marketer of a prestige line of handbags, briefcases, luggage, and accessories, including eyeglasses. The company made its reputation selling sturdy leather purses in unchanging, traditional, classic styles, and it remains one of the best-known leather brands in the United States and has a growing reputation overseas. Formed in 1941, the company started with just six leather workers who made small leather goods, primarily wallets and billfolds, by hand. By 1960, a number of women's handbags were designed to supplement the factory's low-margin wallet production. The purses, given the brand name Coach, were made of sturdy cowhide, in which the grain of the leather could still be seen, instead of the thin leather pasted over cardboard that was used for most women's handbags at the time. This innovation marked the company's entry into the field of classic, long-lasting, luxury women's handbags that Coach would come to define. Coach was family owned and operated until 1985, when Sara Lee Corporation purchased the firm. Coach took its first steps overseas in 1988. Coach remained a subsidiary of Sara Lee until 2001, when the firm regained its independence via a spinoff.

GUCCI

Gucci (pronounced Guchi) was founded in 1921 by Guccio Gucci. In 1938, Gucci expanded and a boutique was opened in Rome, where Guccio was responsible for designing many of the company's products. In 1947, Gucci introduced the bamboo handle handbag, which is still a company mainstay. Guccio and his wife, Aida Calvelli, had a large family, though only the sons—Vasco, Aldo, Ugo, and Rodolfo—would play a role in leading the company. After Guccio's death in 1953, Aldo helped lead the company to a position of International prominence, opening the company's first boutique in New York. Gucci targeted the Far East for further expansion in the late 1960s, opening stores in Hong Kong and Tokyo. At that time, the company also developed its famous GG logo (Guccio Gucci's initials), the Flora silk scarf (worn prominently by Hollywood actress Grace Kelly), and the Jackie O shoulder bag, made famous by Jackie Kennedy, the wife of U.S. President John F. Kennedy.

JUICY COUTURE

Pamela Skaist Levy and Gela Taylor met in 1994, when they started a maternity jeans line called Travis Jeans. In 1996, they changed the name to Juicy Couture. The entire Juicy Couture phenomenon started with just a pair of scissors, a bag of T-shirts and two hundred dollars between the co-designers. The original idea was to make sexy basics for their friends, but they soon realized how contagious their designs were. Now Juicy Couture is among one of the top designer fashion brands available today. Liz Claiborne Inc. realized the potential of Juicy fever and purchased one hundred percent of Juicy Couture. Ironically the same day that Liz Claiborne bought Juicy Couture, "Vogue" magazine declared Juicy Couture may just be the "Future of Fashion." Over the years, both the Juicy ladies would slowly introduce new merchandise to their lineup. In 1999, they introduced jeans to their product line called Juicy Jeans. In 2001, they revolutionized the fashion world with the introduction of the sexy tracksuit that many girls still wear today. The natural progression of the Juicy Couture line has made them and the company among one of the most recognizable today. They now create apparel for men as well. Juicy Couture is a top fashion name and they are still growing!
